Research begins with a great idea. How that idea is nurtured into something more depends on many things – time, brainpower, creative energy, partnerships and, perhaps most importantly, investment. • Here at the University of Toronto, each of these elements is at play. Research innovation is all around us, fostered in large part by a wide variety of sponsors who, through financial investment and in-kind contributions, help our researchers bring their ideas to life. • The following special supplement to Edge magazine pays tribute to those supporters, and highlights some of the researchers whose cutting-edge work benefits from this generous investment.